Why Get a Permit?

Building permits are safeguards to ensure that construction projects performed on private property are safe, meet environmental standards and comply with adopted building codes. These safeguards protect homeowners and their family, friends and neighbors from work that does not meet minimum code requirements. Building permits help protect an owner's financial investment and minimize liability or problems during a future sale of the real estate.

The noted (*) projects listed above require a separate permit from St. Louis County. Please contact Woodson Terrace for zoning approval before reaching out to St. Louis County. Woodson Terrace requires a site plan depicting the following information before zoning approval is granted:

1. Location and dimensions of any existing structures and their distance from the property lines;
2. The direction of the slope or drainage is illustrated on the site plan by arrows;
3. The ground elevations and the elevation of the top of the foundation of the structure(s);
4. Location and width of easements (Easements give access rights to Utility Companies and other duly-authorized agencies), thus building within a dedicated easement is restricted;

Homeowners drawing their own construction plans may obtain a copy of their site plan from:

1. The survey of your house at the time you purchased the property;
2. The Title Company that closed the sale of your house;
3. The building permit for your house;
4. The St. Louis County, Assessor's Plat Book maps
